OSHA 300 Log

(to post 2/1/07 - 4/30/07)

OSHA requires that all companies maintain records of work-related injuries and illnesses. For a packet of OSHA required forms, please visit OSHA's website: www.osha.gov or contact our office and we'd be happy to help you.

Review your OSHA 300 log NOW and continue to record incidents through December 31st (start a new form Jan. 1 for 2007). Not only will you assure your compliance with OSHA requirements, but you'll be able to identify problem areas/trends in injuries that need to be addressed to minimize repeat occurrences when possible. For example, you may find you need to conduct a meeting on Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) if multiple eye injuries from flying debris have been recorded; or a meeting covering back safety if you've recorded back injuries this year. Safety Solutions can assist with providing specific safety topic information/handouts for your 'toolbox' meetings. Also, use our expertise during one of our regularly scheduled visits to your facility to reinforce safety in specific areas of concern.

If you need assistance with materials, please feel free contact me.

DECEMBER 2006

OSHA's 'QuickTips' from QuickTakes

We often take it for granted walking from point 'a' to point 'b' while on the job. But, a routine situation can change quickly and dramatically because of slips, trips and falls-the culprit in the majority of general industry accidents. OSHA is aware of that fact and has an assortment of information-from standards and rules to training programs-to help reduce the hazards that cause these accidents. The tips below may seem obvious; but, they're often overlooked or, worse, ignored. Try them-we're confident they'll help keep employees a bit safer:

- Keep walkways and stairs clear of scrap and debris; coil extension cords, lines and hoses when not in use.
- Wipe up spills immediately; wear appropriate water-proof, non-slip footwear.
- Ensure all wet surfaces are covered with non-slip materials; cover floor openings.
- When working in icy conditions, wear lug soles; clear parking lots, stairs and walkways, and use salt/sand as needed.
